The Secret of Raising a Resilient child (Concluding Part)

APPRECIATION

How can we say thank you to our Redeemer, our buckler, our helper, our strength and our Grace! We express our sincere appreciation to all our parents who resumed with us, our new parents and especially to those who have recommended and referred other parents to the school. God bless and keep you in Jesus name. Amen.

ANOINTING SERVICE

It is our tradition in THS, as a Christian school to anoint our treasures and staff at the beginning of every term. Anointing service for this term come up on Wednesday 2nd September, 2019 by 8:30am. Parents are also invited.

TEXT BOOKS

Please note that text books and other materials will be given after first week of resumption and only to pupils who have paid.

2. The experience of solving problems. Manage your own anxiety so you don't make a habit of rescuing your child. Instead, when she gets into a jam, support her in brainstorming possible solutions. If you lecture, teach or solve the problem for her, you're teaching her that she can't solve things herself. Your goal isn't just to solve the problem, but to support your child to feel more capable by giving backup so that she can successfully handle the challenge.

3. Emotional regulation. When kids feel overwhelmed by their emotions, they crumble. By contrast, kids who have better emotional regulation can tolerate the disappointment of losing, or the frustration of practicing as they master their craft. They're more likely to apply themselves, and to overcome setbacks. How can you help your child develop emotional regulation? Accept and allow all emotions, even when you need to limit behavior.

4. The experience of mastery. Developing grit--that quality of pushing through obstacles as we pursue something about which we're passionate--depends on the child working hard to accomplish her own goals, whether that's mastering a jump shot, short story, recipe or camping trip. Notice that the motivation comes from within, not to please us, so it has to be the child's own interest. Make sure that your child gets plenty of time to initiate and pursue his own passions, which isn't always easy in this age of homework and screen time.

Knowing that someone cares, and is there to help him pick up the pieces, is the foundation of resilience. You can't protect your child from the rain that falls in every life. What you can do is make sure that he knows how to find an umbrella, and has the confidence to make it through the storm. To teach him that, you don't withhold the umbrella and make him stand out in the rain. You provide backup, coaching him repeatedly so he learns how to find or build an umbrella and has the emotional strength to do that, even when the rain pours down.

Now's the time to start practicing. Some day, your child will look back and remember that he's dealt with hard times before, and he came out fine. It's your unwavering love that will get him there.
